CLINICAL CONSIDERATION IN AEROMEDICAL TRANSPORT(CCAT)

ABOUT CCAT COURSES:

The courses intend to provide a unique opportunity for current and potential professionals to gain, update, refresh, and exchange knowledge and skills in transferring patients around the world, as well as to achieve a deep understanding and professional approach to patient transfer with the guidance of experts in aviation physiology, retrieval medicine, intensive care, emergency medicine, and prehospital care.

FOUNDATION LEVEL COURSE (5 DAYS)

A Five-day introductory professional development course for doctors, nurses, paramedics, and other healthcare professionals who currently work in patient air transport systems, or those who wish to do so, include pre-course teaching packs. Face-to-face lessons include

Part 1 (Basic Sciences). These two days are devoted entirely to the relevant principles of aviation and environmental physiology and are cornerstones to the clinical and logistic principles of aeromedical care. This part of the curriculum is considered so significant that it has its own examination, independent of the final course exam.

Part 2 (Clinical Sciences). The three-day level course covers clinical aspects of transport medicine with a focus on fixed-wing and helicopter flight. It provides the necessary context for making sound and safe decisions about fitness to fly, as well as predicting potential aeromedical problems.
